It is usually considered impolite to brag, but I think we at St John's have a lot to be proud of in the accomplishments of our students. I looked back over the past year and was astounded not only by the level of achievement but also by the variety of fields where our students are excelling.

You only have to look to the list of graduates who are College members this year to see what we mean by academic excellence. This year we had 220 graduates from 45 different degree programs. Of these 22 are graduate students including four who have earned doctorates. You may notice the number of students in professional programs: medicine, dentistry, interior design, social work, law, nursing, engineering and pharmacy. This is a big change from the small arts college on Main Street in 1918! Our students continue to be among the best at the University of Manitoba: 20 have graduated with First Class Honours and 48 with Distinction.

Now, before you read any further I want you to turn to pages 10 and 11 of this issue. There are College winners in the Indigenous Awards of Excellence, the Three Minute Thesis Competition, the Undergraduate Research poster Competition, even the Canadian Satellite Design Challenge (our Senior Don!). And that is not all. Six fourth year College students have been recognized as President's Scholars by Dr. Barnard out of a total of 67 students in this category. Not to be outdone, eight College members were recognized with the Emerging Leaders Awards by the University out of a total of 43 students.

Don't forget the Faculty! Professor Adele Perry not only received the Arts Outstanding Professor Award but has also been made Distinguished Professor by the University. Two of our Visiting Fellows, Robert Coutts and Erin Millions, defended their Doctoral theses and Erin went on to win the Prize for the Best Ph.D. in Canadian Studies.

Remember that we are the smallest academic unit on campus with 753 students, 100 of whom are in Residence! I am bursting with pride at their achievements. We know that the College continues to attract among the best high school students and that the strong sense of community at the College provides the base from which our students can excel.

Fostering that strong sense of community recently came through in our consultations around the design for a new residence. Over the past year, College Council has been deliberating over building a new residence for the College. This past summer we put out a call for a Request for Proposals for the design and costing for three possible projects: renovating our current residence, building a new residence, and building a new residence with a Zero Carbon footprint. Six architectural firms submitted proposals and after careful evaluation ft3 was selected to move the project into the design stage. As part of the design process we have had two meetings involving the various stakeholders on what vision we have for our residence. The students and the alumni at these meetings have emphasized over and over again to the architects that the design must build COMMUNITY.

We hope to take the design proposals to College Council for the May meeting. Building a new residence will be the largest and most expensive project the College has undertaken since we moved to the Fort Gary campus. You will be hearing much more about it in the Fall issue of In Lumine – so keep your eyes open!

Chaplain's Corner

Making Space with Rev. Andrew Rampton

We humans love to organize the world around us. We categorize, we differentiate, we create lists and systems. We come by the tendency honestly: according to Genesis, the naming of all of the animals in creation was one of Adam's first tasks.

Among the ways we organize is by making spaces. We have separate spaces for working, for sleeping, for eating, for playing, for trading, for gathering and socializing, and so on. St John's College is a space set apart for particular purposes. It is a college for learning and teaching about the world and the human experience, in the hope that by learning more about the natural world we will also learn more about God. "In Thy Light Shall We See Light." In aid of this mission, St John's is also divided further into separate spaces: classrooms for learning, a residence for living, a chapel for prayer and worship, a library for research and study, offices for administration, and so on.

One of the attributes that sets St John's apart is the space that we make for one another. The size of the college means that everyone who works and studies here sees one another in the various spaces almost every day. And those encounters in space beget a particular attitude about one another; we make space for one another in our lives.

There is always space at St John's for a conversation, whether it's catching up after a holiday break, or an inquiry after someone's ill family member. Part of my job as chaplain is making sure that there's always a space for people who need to be heard. They're conversations that don't always fit in a classroom or an instructor's office. Whether it's a short chat in the hallway with someone who's really looking for their class in St Paul's College next door, listening to a student unload about their stress over workload and graduate school applications, a relationship in turmoil, or someone who can't afford groceries until the next term, there is a space at St John's for those conversations.

St John's is a space set apart, but somehow that space draws those of us who have been here closer together, and I think we're all the better for it.

It's been busy in the Chapel!

We have services in the Chapel on Mondays and Tuesdays starting at 12:15pm led by Rev'd Andrew Rampton. Students also use the Chapel to practise the piano and one student left the music for Für Elise for others to use in their lessons. And, Worship United, is a Monday afternoon event led by students described in the community section by Sunday Olukoju of the Sou'wester (a local paper) as "therapeutic worship... through music, they create an atmosphere of worship, reflection, relaxation, rest, healing and safe relationship building". 2018 Convocation

The annual FRIENDS OF ST JOHN'S COLLEGE luncheon was an opportunity for our donors and alumni, students, families, staff and fellows to share experiences over food.

As usual Convocation began with the Founders and Benefactors service in the Chapel. This year, in recognition of the 100th anniversary of the end of the First World War, we remembered those Johnians on the Honour Roll.

Expansive Language for God

Rev. Dr. Heather McCance

A TED talk by Stanford professor of psychology, neuroscience and symbolic systems Lera Boroditsky recently caught my imagination. In it, Professor Boroditsky shares research into the ways language and culture shape our understanding of reality.

She shares her research with the Kuuk Thaayorre aboriginal people of Australia. In the Kuuk language, there is no concept of left and right. Spatial orientation is described using cardinal compass points. Thus, a Kuuk speaker might speak of her northeast shoulder being sore, or ask you to pass him the book to your south. As a result, Kuuk speakers have been shown to be significantly better oriented to their surroundings; even in unfamiliar places, you'll rarely find a native Kuuk speaker who is lost.

Another example Boroditsky shares has to do with languages that have grammatical gender, where nouns are assigned as masculine or feminine. Different languages assign different genders to the same nouns, however. Boroditsky's work shows that a German speaker would tend to think of a bridge as elegant and beautiful, while a Spanish speaker would describe the same bridge as long and strong. The word bridge is feminine in German, and masculine in Spanish.

Our language shapes the way we think and interact with reality.

During the summer of 2018, The Episcopal Church (TEC) meeting in General Convention in Austin, TX engaged in significant conversation about revising their prayer book. Anglican churches around the world don't express their theology in formal statements of faith as much as through their liturgies. An oft-quoted Latin phrase, lex orandi lex credendi expresses this Anglican liturgical way of doing theology: literally, the law of praying is the law of believing, although some expand that notion to "as we worship, so we will live."

When I was first engaged in theological study, "inclusive language" was discussed both in terms of its application to human beings and its application to God. There was general acceptance of the need for inclusive language for human beings. Thus a line in the creed that described Jesus, "who for us men and for our salvation came down from heaven" dropped the word "men." The New Revised Standard Version of the Bible uses words like "mortal" and "humankind" where earlier translations used "man" and "mankind."

Using inclusive language for God is more problematic for some. Indeed, the phrase is odd in this context; how could human language possibly be inclusive of all that God is? Perhaps that is why TEC has used the phrase "expansive language" instead.

TEC has decided to move ahead to provide expansive language resources for worshipping congregations. While traditional language for the triune God (Father, Son and Holy Spirit) is maintained in the historic creeds, Jesus is said to have been made "truly human" rather than "was made man." Expansive language recalls, for example, that when God describes godself in bodily images in the Bible, it is as one with a womb (Job 38:29, Isaiah 46:3), and that Jesus yearns to gather broken Jerusalem as a mother hen gathers her chicks under her wings (Matthew 23:37).

Christian theology has always acknowledged the inability of human language to express the reality of God. Yet historically the images chosen have been overwhelmingly male, imperialist and militaristic. TEC's move to expand its language for the Divine in worship is an important corrective to these tendencies.

Our language shapes the way we think and interact with reality. It's important for Christians, then, to use language that calls to mind all that God has revealed godself to be, so that we can live our faith as fully as Christ calls us to live.

Edna Poulter has waited more than 20 years to see recognition for a relative of her late husband, Ted Poulter '58. Ted was the nephew of NHL Charles "Chuck" Gardiner, his mother's brother, a star NHL goaltender who led the Chicago Blackhawks to a Stanley Cup win in 1934. The Pioneer Arena, located in the north end of Winnipeg, will be renamed the "Charlie Gardiner Arena". Charlie came through the minor hockey system in Winnipeg, and then played professional with the Winnipeg Maroons who "sold" him to the Chicago Blackhawks in 1927. He played for Chicago for 7 seasons, winning the Vezina trophy for outstanding goaltender twice. Named to the first all-star team 3 times and second team once he was the only goaltender to captain his team to win the Stanley Cup. Upon his return to Winnipeg, Charlie developed a tonsil infection and died 6 weeks later. Edna, along with her son John and grandchildren Isaac and Megan attended the Pioneer Arena last June to see the rendering of the new sign soon to be renamed the "Charlie Gardiner Arena."

Jocelyn Barnard and Ali Bonneteau

Congratulations to Jocelyn Barnard '63 and daughter Ali Bonneteau who finished the Manitoba 10K Marathon in 1 hour 48 minutes. Says Jocelyn "Ali kept up a good pace and I was 4 minutes faster than 15 years ago. It was a fun time and so neat we could do it together. The Manitoba Marathon put out a call for all those who had run the first marathon in 1979 as it was the 40th anniversary. My friend and I had run the first one. So I convinced Ali to just do the 10 km with me. There were 54 of the original 1979'ers who answered the bell and participated in various events on Sunday. Only 6 of the 54 were women. It was a great day and I am very blessed to still be able to participate."

New Art Work in Daily Bread Café by Rebecca Haverluch

The Daily Bread Café has brightened up the hallway with an original mural painted by Rebecca Haverluch, a University of Manitoba Fine Arts student. The painting is based on an original drawing for the space of microscopic plant root cells in cross-cut. The imagery is organic and reflects growth, community and the energy of student life. Rebecca also referenced plant life and the nourishment we receive from the earth to tie into the Daily Bread Café.
